EDUCATION

Ann Cheri Foxx, M.D. graduated from the Medical University of South Carolina School of Medicine in Charleston, where she also completed an internship in general surgery before pursuing a residency in anesthesiology at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia.

After many years of practicing as an anesthesiologist in the peri-operative setting, she went on to complete a fellowship in interventional pain management with a strong concentration in multidisciplinary approaches at Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia.

The lessons learned alleviating pain during major surgeries certainly shaped how she practices pain management in the outpatient setting, using the transferable skills gained from being a physician anesthesiologist treating the highest acuity patients imaginable.

Her practice has been focused on the subspecialty of interventional pain management since 2010. She is board-certified in both anesthesiology and in pain medicine by the American Board of Anesthesiology, the premier certifying institution for pain management.

EXPERTISE

Dr. Foxx developed expertise in the treatment of cancer pain at the Winship Cancer Institute of Emory University in its continuity clinic providing cancer pain management services and procedures. She also received fellowship training in the management and implantation of intrathecal pumps for cancer pain management.

In addition, Dr. Foxx worked alongside the late Dr. Lisa Stearns, who was the world-leader in intrathecal implantation and a great mentor. These incomparable experiences elevate Dr. Foxx among her peers.
